A POLITICAL, COMMERCIAL, AND LITERARY JOURNAL

NO. 30.

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

THE PROPOSED ARMISTICE—DISTRUST AND DOUBT.

From the London Morning Herald.

It seems to be now conceded that we are to have an armistice, and from the fact we may safely conclude that peace is determined on, as the advantages which will accrue to Russia from a cessation of hostilities are so great that no statesman could be blind enough or wicked enough to accede to such a measure if it be possible that hostilities are to be renewed.

These advantages consist of the following items:—

1. A delay which will enable the armies of Mouravieff to be reinforced and supplied with matériel of war.
2. An opportunity of selling vast quantities of Russian produce for English gold to assist her in carrying on the war.
3. Perhaps a facility of raising a loan upon the chance of peace.
4. An occasion for disturbing, if not breaking up, our alliance with France and so isolating England in the council of Europe.
5. A postponement of all military naval operations to such a period as will render an advance more difficult.

Surely, if the war is to be renewed, no one can for a moment suppose that these advantages will be given to Russia as if purposely to increase our own difficulties.

100 millions of money?

Was it for the purpose of securing the integrity of the Sultan's dominions! Surely not, for he is to forfeit his Daulat and Principalities, which we may suppose will become, under our fostering care, like the last portion of his territory of which we assisted in despoiling him—Greece—a European nuisance—an anarchical nest of swindlers, pirates and brigands.

organization is not one which wise men

We could not have made the sacrifice alluded to, in order to secure the Sultan's independence; for all Europe, including Russia, is to interfere in regulating the internal arrangements of his empire.

have the haratch remitted, a tax which they willingly pay for the exemption they have hitherto enjoyed from an imposition which they are now desired to consider as a privilege.

In the meantime peace will be declared.

ed, and Russia will be "invited" to assist in the pacification of the Turkish Empire. We have no doubt that she will assist at the almost inevitable "cure" which must follow hard upon such proceedings with the very greatest satisfaction.

By the treaty of the 8th of May, 1856 the Allied Powers are pledged to withdraw their troops from the Turkish signatures within forty eight days after the signature of peace: but will the Austrians

But if we have not insured either the integrity or independence of the Turkish Empire, it will be said that we have got the neutralization of the Black Sea.

This certainly is a vast acquisition, but how is it to exist while Nicot latest remains intact, and the Sea of Azov is not to be interfered with, it puzzles the poor brain to understand. Perhaps, however, it may mean that, as we have made Russia sink her ships, we should have new Navarino for the Turkish, so as to start the two powers upon equal terms!

by the fall of Herat, five hundred miles—from the mouth of the Attruck, now navigated by her steamers—towards India, and is at this present moment a cheval of the high road of our commerce, from Trebizond to Tabriz—we do not see that she will have any reason to complain of the proposed arrangements, and we willingly make a truce—to last until the anarchy of Turkey, occasioned by Western med-

ing, will render her interference in the character of a mediator, her favorite bear

Meanwhile, if a coalition should take place between the Western allies, and England, by Lord Palmerston's successful management, should be involved in an American war, the future disposal of the Sultan's dominions can be arranged between the three empires, and England's wishes as to interests may receive but little attention.

... at the hand of the Constantinople Congress.

Looking at all these complications, we cannot help thinking that a peace made at the present time will be very similar to its effects to the acquisition of Cabul by our troops in the Afghan war: of which event the great Duke is reported to have remarked—"As soon as you have got it, your difficulties will begin."

Among the petitions presented, was one by Mr. Christie, from between 700 and 800 inhabitants of Toronto, drawing attention to the fact that, in certain portions of the province justice was not duly administered, and citing the Corrigan case as an instance.

Mr. A. B. Windsor has been a constant friend for the liberal patronage they have extended to him, and trusts by punctuality business to merit a continuance of their favors.
